GROUP LAUNCH OF
HEALTH HUMANITIES introduced by
*Professor Paul Crawford

How can creative practices support health?

Professor Paul Crawford will speak on:

'How can creative practices support health?'

There will then follow a focused discussion on how the Humanities and the Chester Medical School can effectively collaborate in research and teaching.

Do come along to hear about the power of the medical Humanities and to help shape its future at Chester.

Professor Paul Crawford is the founder and the world's first professor of the field of health humanities. He directs the Centre for Social Futures at the Institute of Mental Health, The University of Nottingham, UK. He has contributed to policy development in mental health and human care in the UK, advising senior politicians on the importance of the arts and humanities in healthcare, health and wellbeing. He consults on mental health, health care environments, and has spearheaded the notion of creative public health—democratising arts and humanities knowledge and practices to advance health and wellbeing.
